I was directed to you with my concerns.

I find it very difficult to understand why we would want a power plant to come into our community. Especially as Hayward is just beginning to make inroads into improvements. We need to compete with our neighboring bay area communities to attract people; a power plant will do no such thing and will have the opposite effect. I see it turning into richmond and martinez; when such a business invades our community its all downhill after that.

We need to be focused on making the communities here better with our sights on making this town like pleasanton or danville, san ramon on this side of the bay and mountain view, belmont, menlo park, etc on the other side of the bay in order to attract people to come and live and play here. We are surrounded by these very nice and attractive towns that we are competing with; putting in a power plant will drastically negatively impact the future of this town.

my two cents.

Thank you for your response. Is there an email at the Energy Commission that I could forward my thoughts too?

Dear Judy,
Thanks for your email. Unfortunately, the City does not have veto power over this decision. The decision is made by the California Energy Commission. The environmental impacts are assessed by the Bay Area Air Quality District not by the City. They have just held a public hearing, and we are awaiting their decision.
